The works of E.M. Uhlenbeck (1913-2003)

An annotated bibliography¹

Eugenius Marius Uhlenbeck – Bob as he was known to his friends – was a multifaceted (or many-sided) and multi-talented person. He was an accomplished scholar in the fields of Javanese language and literature and in general linguistics holding the chairs in these disciplines at Leiden University from 1950-1983 and 1958-1979 respectively. In the Netherlands and abroad he was widely acclaimed as an elder ‘statesman’.² His publications reflect his rare combination of talents. I will limit myself here to brief comments about his publications on linguistics, both general and Javanese linguistics. Bob was convinced that linguistic descriptions should be theory-driven and conversely, that linguistic theory-building should be based on exhaustive analyses of natural language data derived from a wide range of different languages and different language families. Hence he systematically backed his numerous publications on Old and Modern Javanese with theoretical articles, especially on morphology, syntax, semantics and the relation between word and morpheme as well as that between word and sentence. Bob belonged to the theoretical school of European structuralist; later he would qualify his position as that of a ‘functional structuralist’ (Uhlenbeck 1987b). He was keenly aware of the continuity between Neo-Bloomfieldian (aka American structuralist) and generativist conceptions of language (Uhlenbeck 1979a). As one of the editors of Lingua (1950-1983) he was personally involved in the genesis and development of generative grammar, of which he became one of its first and certainly one of its most tenacious critics (Uhlenbeck 1973a). He emphasized the centrality of the word as the fundamental unit of language and denounced the overemphasis on formal aspects of grammar to the neglect of semantics, in Neo-Bloomfieldian and generativist theories of language. The centrality of the word clearly emerges from Bob’s theory of morphology, according to which ‘morphemes are always dependent on and subordinate to the word category in which they appear' (Uhlenbeck 1992b:8). This insight was applied with scientific rigour in his studies on Javanese morphology, most of which were conveniently collected in 1978 (Uhlenbeck 1978a). The relation of the word to the sentence, the other fundamental unit in Bob's conception of language, is the topic of a number of foundational publications (for example, Uhlenbeck 1983d). The sentence provides the framework within which words act and interact. Combining words into larger units brings about interaction between and the integration of the meanings of the individual words, thereby restricting the inherent dynamicity and flexibility of word meanings. Even in his initial descriptions of the syntactic structures in Javanese he took into account intonational features (Uhlenbeck 1965b). At first Bob used them in the analysis of word groups only, but he soon realized that intonational features also played an important part in the analysis of the sentence as a whole. This led him to distinguish between word group on the one hand, and sentence segment on the other (Uhlenbeck 1975c). The phenomenon of sentence segmentation, or intonational phrasing as it is commonly referred to, was explicitly connected with the Prague School concept of Functional Sentence Perspective; he applied it to Old and Modern Javanese alike (Uhlenbeck 1994c). A final example of how well-informed Bob was in the theoretical field, was the introduction of clitics, probably one of the most hotly debated grammatical categories, into his description of the grammar of Old Javanese (Uhlenbeck 1986b).

The following bibliography claims to be definitive (although two items are as yet unpublished). It is organized chronologically and provided with an elementary index for ease of reference. Dutch titles are translated and more enigmatic titles (often short comments) have been annotated whenever this seemed useful. New editions, reprints, revised versions and translations are cross-referenced.
